

The 1939 National Register, taken on 29th September 1939, was used to produce identity cards and ration books, administer conscription and direct labour, as well as monitor and control the movement of the population due to military mobilisation and mass evacuation.

Below are copies of the enumerators' records, made as they went from house to house collecting information.

Some records have been 'blanked out'. Mostly these are of individuals who are still alive, children when the register was compiled.

Since, those parishioners who were away, typically on military service, are not included, the register is not a complete census of those who lived in the village, just a few months earlier, in peace time.
